SHROPSHIRE HOUSES PAST PRESENT

RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 92 pages. Original publisher: Vicksburg, Miss. : U. S. Army Engineer Waterways Experiment Station, 1995 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)43452315 Subject: Wetlands -- United States. Excerpt: . . . test assessment models. However, once the development phase is completed, the time and resources required to apply the functional indices are consistent with what is typically available in the 404 public interest review process. Another potential limitation is that the functional indices resulting from the development phase of the approach can be used to compare wetlands from the same regional subclass, but they cannot be used to compare wetlands from different regional subclasses within a region or similar wetlands from different regions. While it is theoretically possible to make these types of comparisons using absolute, empirical standards (e. g. , number of cubic feet of water stored annually or the grams of carbon produced per year), the time and resources required to quantify these relationships are feasible only in the context of an intensive research project, and not the public interest review process. A third potential limitation is that functional indices developed under this approach cannot be used to assess cumulative impacts of a proposed project as required by the public interest review process (33 CFR Section 320. 4 (a) (3)). In assessing wetland functions, this approach considers the landscape surrounding the wetland in the context of how it influences the capacity of the wetland to perform functions. In assessing cumulative impacts, the focus shifts from the functions performed at the wetland ecosystem scale to the larger landscape or watershed scale. At these larger scales, the important question becomes how does the loss of wetland ecosystem function affect landscape or watershed processes The...
