Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Classical Review, Vol. 2 Homer are derived from the folk-lore, the mdrchen, and the popular poetry of the people to which the eijic poet belonged: the people alone can create myths, and the people can create myths alone. Myth is the form in which the people expresses its feelings. Now, Herr Gruppe points out, the people as a whole cannot compose; some one individual must first invent the tale, and from the narrow circle of his hearers the tale must spread from circle to circle until it gradually permeates the whole people. If it does so spread it becomes popular poetry and national. It is the expression of the peoples feeling only in the sense that it alone has commended itself to the feelings of the people, whereas countless rival attempts have failed to commend themselves to the popular taste, have perished in the struggle for existence. But in what other way does the epic of literature survive in the struggle and become national Plainly in both cases the function of the public is not creative but critical, in both cases it weeds out what it does not approve. It matters not from what point in the area of the nation the tale takes its f-tart, the conditions whicli determine wliether it shall or shall not spread in ever-widening circles from the spot into wliifh it was 6 rst cast by the artist, until its lin: il circle comprises the whole of the nation, are identical in lloth cases. But into what part of the nation is the myth first cast Is it necessarily cast first amongst the lower classes of society, as is assumed by the Grimm...
