Guided by these specimens, he has traced the progress of the disease from its very commencement, both in the leaves and stalk and in the tuber. All of his conclusions seem reasonable and not improbable. The disease in the tuber always commences by the appearance of a brown matter in the cells which contain the starch. Each of these cells includes a little bag filled with grains of starch, and a liquid, having in solution albuminous substances, dextrine, and a little sugar; by the decomposition of these substances is produced the brown color which, in a more advanced stage of the disease, becomes black. On chemical examination, these colored substances have all the properties of humus and ulmin, two bodies which, under the form of humic and ulmic acids, occupy a prominent position in the organic part of the soil. As the...
